IFTA World Family Therapy Congress in Argentina: Beautiful Buenos Aires, March 17-20, 2010

Returning to South America for a highly anticipated meeting will be the International Family Therapy Association's XVIII World Family Therapy Congress March 17-20, 2010. “Argentina, with its rich heritage of family therapy and its contribution of many leaders around the globe, is a wonderful place for such a congress,” said IFTA President William Nichols.

An outstanding lineup of plenary presenters includes Kenneth V. Hardy (USA), Cecile Rausch Herscovici (Argentina), Marie-Luise Conen (Germany), Jaakko Seikkula (Finland), Sandra Stith (USA), and Sergio Bernales (Chile). Ruth Casabianca (Argentina), Scientific Committee Coordinator, reported that the abstracts from around the world have been reviewed and are slotted to fill openings in workshops and other types of program slots with important and relevant contents.

This year’s congress theme is “Family Therapy 2010: Sharing in Challenging Times.” The focus will be on sharing findings, approaches to problems and ways of coping with them, and helping to heal hurting families, couples, and children in various cultures, and fostering mental health and growth in challenging times. Communicating and networking among therapists, researchers, teachers, and mental health administrators both during the time in Buenos Aires and after returning to home and community will be a significant part of the congress process. The congress is expected to enhance participant’s awareness of how the development of family therapy is rapidly becoming a mutual back-and-forth process in which new ways can and are found from all parts of the world.

Hundreds of participants from scores of countries will gather to learn about old, familiar problems and needs and novel, unfamiliar challenges they have not faced previously. Therapy, education, training, supervision, and personal growth and development emphases will be offered for the enrichment of clinicians, academicians, and administrators and managers, as well as for students, in mental health fields.

The Hosting Committee, coordinated by Adela Garcia (Argentina), has a variety of activities planned both at the headquarters of the congress—the Panamericano Buenos Aires Hotel—and in the community and region.

“A beautiful setting, comfortable, temperate weather, a nation rich in family therapy tradition as the host country, and a stimulating program—what more can you want?” asked a veteran of many IFTA congresses.

NOMINATION COMMITTEE SEeks Suggestions for IFTA Board of Directors

The entire class of 2007-2010 completes its term on June 30 of this year and three are eligible to run for reelection. The fourth, Madhu Kasirian (South Africa) is not eligible for reelection, since she will be completing two three-year terms, the maximum for consecutive service.

The other three: Charlotte Englebrecht (South Africa), Snezana Mijalkovic (New Zealand), and Maire Steadman (United Kingdom) are fulfilling one year vacancies. Each of them will be eligible to be nominated for a three year term and, if elected, to serve that term and to be nominated for a second three year term.

The Nominating Committee is open to member nominations. Suggestions may be forwarded to the Secretariat to be forwarded to the Committee.

MARRIAGE AND FAMILY THERAPY RANKED AS ONE OF THE 50 BEST CAREERS

U.S. News & World Report ranked marriage and family therapist as one of the best of 50 careers for 2010. The article explained that there is an expected 14% growth between 2008 and 2018, fueled by an increased acceptance of marriage and family therapy. The field of marriage and family therapy is gaining both in recognition and growth in the United States and around the world. There are two very positive aspects to this report. First, even during these tough economic times, the field of marriage and family therapy is projected to get stronger. Second, this demonstrates that marriage and family therapy is also gaining in market recognition. Getting the attention of such a major publication certainly reflects the dedication and hard work of so many marriage and family therapists.

INTRODUCTION TO BEAUTIFUL BUENOS AIRES

Buenos Aires is the capital city of the Republic of Argentina and one of the most important cities in Latin America. It houses the National Government Offices, the Legislative Chambers and Judicial Powers, the forces of defense and security, and the diplomatic missions that maintain relations with the country.

One of the most interesting attractions of Buenos Aires is its architecture. Its style reflects the influence of the Spaniards, French and Italians in its building and in its parks. The city has wide avenues, mansions, extensive green spaces, hundreds of sculptures and a large quantity of churches; all integrated among houses, office buildings, apartment buildings and modern skyscrapers.

Buenos Aires surprises its visitors with its contrasts: with a mixture of different styles that distinguishes the big cities of the world: elegant, noisy, cultural, lover of the tango, of endless coffee chats, of nightlife and of course: of football.

GEOGRAPHY

The city of Buenos Aires is located in front of the Río de la Plata, it occupies a surface of 200km² and it is made up of 47 neighborhoods.

The majority of the “Porteños” are identified with the neighborhood where they lived almost all their life. It is not common that tourists visit all these neighborhoods since there aren’t specific attractions; but nine of them concentrate most of the tourist attractions: La Boca, San Telmo, Monserrat, Puerto Madero, San Nicolás, Retiro, Recoleta, Palermo and Belgrano.

It is easy to move around the city since it is distributed in blocks of 100 meters long and wide (10,000 square meters surface). There are avenues and streets identified with names of personalities of the cultural, military and political history of the country and of the world as well as places and dates. The financial district, commonly referred to as “La City” or “Microcentro” is located between Avenida Cordoba and Avenida de Mayo and between Avenida 9 de Julio and Avenida Paseo Colón; while the tourist areas of the city are found in the neighborhoods near the “centro” or downtown, and they are: Recoleta, Palermo, la Boca, San Telmo and Puerto Madero.

Check out the “Plano de Buenos Aires” website at www.planodebuenosaires.com, for detailed information on streets and attractions.
Susan H. Horwitz (1947-2009)

Susan H. Horwitz, PhD, described as the “heartbeat” of the Family Therapy Training Program at the University of Rochester Medical Center, master teacher, family therapy clinician, and advocate for families, who was particularly devoted to preventing domestic violence died September 24, 2009 of brain cancer.

Also described as “passionate about helping prevent and treat family violence through research, clinical work, and professional education” by Susan H. McDaniel, PhD, director of the Institute for the Family at the University of Rochester, Dr. Horwitz, an associate professor of psychiatry had been a member of the faculty since 1988. Eric Cain, MD, chair of Rochester’s Department of Psychiatry, not only praised her personal qualities of warmth, intelligence, and self-direction, but also acclaimed her bravery in “illuminating what others would not see” regarding family violence. She developed an effective couples approach for mild to moderate domestic violence. She was widely acclaimed by students and colleagues for her compassion as well as her commitment.

In addition to her clinical, educational, and research work at Rochester, where she taught marital and family therapists, physicians, and other professionals, and work as a family therapist, consultant to school districts and courts in the area, Dr. Horwitz also instructed mental health providers in Finland, Hungry, New Zealand, and the former Yugoslavia.

Dr. Horwitz is survived by her husband, Richard Horwitz, Penfield, NY, two children, Rebecca Horwitz, of Rochester, and Jason Horwitz, Boston, Massachusetts, and other relatives.

“Susan was above all an advocate for the family, her students and her colleagues. In the many years that she served as a faculty member at the University of Rochester, she was always available with love and compassion to those who needed her. No cause was too minor, and all in need received the same intense attention until their needs were met. Susan was a loving and selfless friend, a highly intelligent and endlessly curious and compassionate colleague, and a stimulating and inspiring teacher. She will be sorely missed by all who had the privilege of knowing her.”

Family Therapy in India: An overview

Mudita Rastogi, Ph.D.

The Indian Association for Family Therapy (IAFT) is based in New Delhi, India with an approximate membership of a 110 (V.K. Parsai, September 3, 2009, personal communication). Although I live and work in the Chicago area as a Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist, I maintain a special interest in the IAFT because I was one of its founding members.

According to Bhatti (2003), family therapy has been practiced in India for about 55 years. While working with patients in a hospital in Amritsar (in north India) Vidya Sagar set up an “outpatient” family therapy unit in 1954. Identified Patients (IPs) and their families were housed in tents as he got families involved with the care of the IP and also disseminated psychoeducation. Despite this promising start the only university level MFT training available in India today is medically focused and is located at the National Institute of Mental Health and Neuro Sciences, Bangalore. (For a detailed discussion of the state of MFT in India please see Rastogi, Natrajan & Thomas, 2005).

My personal interest in MFT resulted from being supervised by a family therapist while completing my master’s in Psychology at Bombay University in the late 80’s. At around that time a group of mental health professionals in New Delhi organized family therapy training workshops taught by a visiting instructor from England. These trainings evolved into a study group comprised of social workers, child development professionals, counselors, and psychologists, and in May 1991 they decided to formally launch the Indian Association for Family Therapy (IAFT).

The IAFT holds workshops, trainings and an annual conference each year. Some recent workshops have included the work of Gottman, Susan Johnson’s Emotionally Focused Therapy, gender issues, child abuse and a culturally sensitive look at adolescence. IAFT members work with issues such as the impact of globalization on families and sex roles (Rastogi, 2009), and the influx of technology and its effect on family relationships. Since Indian clients constantly deal with in-law issues and extended family members MFT models needs to be sensitively modified to be applied to Indian families.

Today, faculty interested in MFT are located in Chennai (Rastogi, et al, 2005), the University of Delhi, Tata Institute of Social Science in Mumbai (formerly Bombay), MS University in Baroda, Christ University in Bangalore, and Berhampur University in Orissa (Carson & Chowdhury, 2000). Despite this, there is a not a single department at a university in India that offers a social science degree in MFT. This is partly because the field of mental health in India is dominated by social workers, counselors, and psychologists. These practitioners graduated from individually oriented programs and their family therapy training was often informal. Also, creating new areas of study can be a very complex process (Renu Malaviya, March 11, 2005, personal communication). Further, many Indian MFTs either accept academic positions abroad or do private practice in India. This lack of a university based curriculum in family therapy continues to hurt the field but hopefully this will change soon.

Mudita Rastogi, Ph. D., is a clinical member and Approved Supervisor of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy and a licensed marriage and family therapists in the Chicago, IL area.

If so, you’re in for a rare treat: You can experience in the plenary sessions contributions of major family therapists who are at the top of their professional careers. You can expect to find some extensive and thought provoking connections and practical guidance among the plenary presentations who come from quite different but somewhat common backgrounds.

Ourselves And Our Practice

That will be the title of the first plenary session of the XVIIth International Family Therapy Association World Family Therapy Congress in Buenos Aires, Argentina. The first two internationally known presenters—Kenneth V. Hardy, PhD, USA, and Cecile Rausch Herscovici, PhD, Argentina, will deal with different but overlapping areas of concern and life for all family therapists.

Herscovici’s presentation will focus on where we are with regard to evidence based practice and where we need to go. She describes family therapy as “a field which is a science of context, of narrative, and of relationship. Noting that there is a “robust crop of outcome research that shows family therapy works” she acknowledges that the nature of the practice, which is language based and focused on relational processes rather than on clearly defined operational processes tends to remain marginal to the mental health field. She proposes a systemic practitioner model of therapy that “is informed by quantitative and qualitative research and should ultimately result in the wisdom necessary to decide what to do with whom and when.”

The relationship between political philosophy and therapy for vulnerable and socially excluded families will be a part of the presentation of Sergio Bernales, MD, Chile. Exploring “Ethical Dilemmas In Psychosocial Interventions From A Contextual Relationship Perspective,” he emphasizes adopting a critical ethical stance and transferring it to the field of family or couple therapy. This includes dealing with the lack of transparency to us of the negative influence of the dominant systems on the socially excluded and the difficulty for those who consult with us to “accept themselves just as they are at that moment and according to the need of change with which they are involved.”

Specific Approaches to Difficult Problems

Dealing with specific difficult problems will be the focus of the final plenary session featuring Jaakko Seikkula, PhD, Finland, and Sandra M. Stith, PhD, USA. Both presenters base their clinical observations and treatment... suggestions on their own research and depth understanding of their respective topics, psychosis in the case of Seikkula and couples violence with Stith.

“Psychotic behavior is the body’s active response to previous experiences at the present moment and [is] not pathological as such,” declares Seikkula. “A lot of evidence exists that most psychotic patients have traumatic experiences in their lives, such as being a victim of accidents, violence, sexual abuse, or poor human relations,” he continues.

These experiences are stored in the body’s memory, often without words. Hallucinations…are very meaningful and should be taken seriously and aimed at mutual dialogue…” The family is involved in the patient’s experiences, sharing the life in which the traumatic experiences have occurred and should always be included in the Need-Adapted approach and Open Dialogue treatment that Seikkula favors. His title succinctly refers to his orientation and work as “Psychosis is response: Dialogue is the best cure for it” as he illustrates with many examples.

Judging from the abstracts presented for consideration for the congress, domestic violence is a concern of therapists across the globe. This “pervasive social problem …has devastating effects on all members of the family as well as the larger society” avers Stith. She and colleagues have developed a treatment program for domestic violence that is offered to single couple and multi-couple groups, which she will discuss and provide evidence of effectiveness for in her presentation. Interesting points are made that violence by the female partner is a strong predictor of violence by the male partner and of increasing levels of injury for the female partner. Although strong reliance has been placed on requiring violent males to secure anger management or therapy, that approach is no panacea for domestic violence. “If the male is the only partner who learns non-violent ways of resolving conflict, the violence in the relationship is not likely to end,” points out Stith.

Journal of Family Psychotherapy Available Online to IFTA Members
Here is a great member benefit! The Journal of Family Psychotherapy is available online to IFTA members. That means you not only will receive a hard-copy issue of the Journal each quarter, but you can also get the Journal online!
You should have by now received login information from Taylor and Francis. Since we do not always have accurate email information from all of our members, or we may have an error in the database, you may not have received that information.
If you have not received an email with instructions on how to log in to the Journal’s online access, please contact Julie Ehlers at Taylor and Francis. Her email is: julie.ehlers@taylorandfrancis.com. Just give her your name and address, and tell her that you are an IFTA member who would like information on how to log in to the Journal of Family Psychotherapy.

IFTA & Social Networking
The use of social networking sites, LinkedIn, Facebook, and Twitter are sweeping the world and IFTA is becoming a part of the worldwide phenomenon. For IFTA members on Facebook (www.facebook.com) there is an IFTA Group. To join do a search on “International Family Therapy Association.” Once to the IFTA group page then click on the link to join. The list is moderated so once you make a request then you will need to be approved by the group moderator.
IFTA also has a LinkedIn (www.LinkedIn.com) group. Similarly, search for the “International Family Therapy Association” group and request to become a member. As a member of the IFTA groups you can send messages to other IFTA members and network with people from around the world.
If you have any questions about the site or the program contact William Northey (northey@comcast.net), and he will be glad to answer any questions you may have.
This year in Buenos Aires the Training Division will hold its first substantive workshop focused on training. Experiential presentations by several Division members will be followed by a panel discussion. We are excited about this new effort to facilitate exchange among training programs around the world.

Our Traveling Trainers Program has received several requests in recent months to help plan newly developing training programs and participate in conducting them. We have chosen to award travel grants for trainers to go to programs in Kosovo and Romania and are looking forward to working with the organizers in both of these countries. The Traveling Trainers Program enlists volunteer trainers who are members of the Training Division to train without honorarium; the Division funds their travel expenses, and the host country provides room and board. Travel grants are made to developing programs in need of assistance.

Our materials clearinghouse has received a large donation of books from the library of Kitty LaPerriere, formerly Director of Training at the Ackerman Institute in New York. Because shipping them to Argentina and the associated duty fees has proved prohibitively expensive, we are planning to make a list of them for our table in Argentina so Training Division Members can order the ones they want to be sent to them in their own countries. Training Division Members may access these materials for $1 US per item. Those who are interested in accessing the clearinghouse and are not yet members of the Education and Training Division can join at the membership table at the Congress.

We urge you, as always, to go through your training materials and donate any you are no longer using to the Training Division Clearinghouse for redistribution. These materials are greatly appreciated by developing programs. Either bring them to the Congress or send them to IFTA Training Division Secretariat, 143 Flying Point Road, Freeport, Maine 04032, USA.

For further information on any of the Division programs, please go to the Division page of the IFTA website.
