“Happiness for Many or Fear No Reason: Using the Satir Model”

Satir Transformational Systemic Therapy Model (STST) has long been known for combining intrapsychic and interactive components of therapy. Virginia Satir believed that there were spiritual yearnings in all human beings which evolved and were experienced within the family. The session will demonstrate how people can release negativity and experience themselves and their family in positive ways. By making new connections and accepting differences, people can find new avenues of experiencing each other and bring happiness to their lives.

Judith Landau M.D.

“The ARISE Model”

The ARISE Model is a cross-cultural approach for enhancing family connectedness, engagement, prevention, and treatment in the face of trauma and addiction. Using a compassionate Invitational Intervention®, the ARISE Model® is a three-phase process which is a Continuum of Care that leads your loved one into appropriate treatment and recovery. The addicted individual is invited to join the process right from the beginning with no surprises, no secrees, no coercion, and absolute respect and love. ARISE introduces the addicted person and the family to a new life of recovery and healing. The individual does not need to hit bottom before getting help.

Wai-Yung Lee Ph.D.

“Working with Asian Chinese Families”

While Asian Chinese shares a very family-oriented culture, psychotherapeutic approaches in Asia are mostly focused on individuals. In this presentation, Dr. Wai Yung Lee will demonstrate how family therapy can be conducted with families from different Chinese regions, including Shanghai, Taiwan, and Hong Kong. Using video segments of live family interviews, she will explain the therapeutic process with a variety of presenting problems in each region: a young girl with eating disorder in Shanghai, a woman with mental illness in Taiwan, and children with psychosomatic problems in Hong Kong.

Maurizio Andolfi M.D.

“Adolescents’ Violent Behavior and Fathers’ Absence: How to Intervene”

Adolescence is a critical stage of development with a lot of misunderstanding and prejudice inside families, schools and helping professions as well. In this presentation violent behavior, bullying, self-destructiveness in adolescence will be explored from a systemic-developmental perspective. Father’s absence has a long history in many disadvantaged families and multicultural social contexts, but is also a relevant issue in wealthy families with the increasing number of divorces, single parent and step-families. The risk of father’s absence and lack of commitment for young kids is very high. Often professionals and institutions don’t include fathers in their treatment programs. They focus on the mother-child.

“The Essence of Therapeutic Change”

The Satir Transformational Systemic Therapy Model (STST) is unique in encompassing both the intrapsychic and interactive components of therapy. The process taps the universal yearnings and spiritual essence of individuals within their personal family and social systems and helps them work towards a sense of responsible wholeness. Intrapsychic change, therefore, not only occurs in clients’ behaviour, cognition and affect but in their sense of Being. When the spiritual essence is accessed experientially, positive possibilities become easily apparent and transformational change as an energetic shift becomes possible. With transformational change, clients experience more of their true essence and release the negative impacts they have held. The impact of intrapsychic transformational change during systemic family therapy is dramatic. Family members experience each other in more positive ways. They become more willing to make new connections, accept differences, and release reactive feelings, perceptions and expectations that have kept them from being open to each other.
